THE TAMMANY CELEBRATION.

"NOISE AND CONFUSION!"

The day was well observed. The weather was fine till 4 o'clock, after which it was rainy. The firing of crackers began the night before and was kept up incessantly. The new liquor law in this City was nowise observed.

At sunrise upon the Battery, under Brigadier-General SPICER, was fired a grand opening salute. To this speedily ensued more extended and unanimous similar exhibition of patriotic pride and gusto. Pistols, musketry rattle, and the deeper bass of the cannon's opening roar, followed in mingled harmony of uproarious discord. Meanwhile, gradually kept pouring into Broadway, the City's grand artery on every great gathering occasion, an increasing influx of human beings; those that did not participate, determined to witness the day's programme of proceedings from the promised "pomp and glorious circumstance" of parade to the minute regular and irregular evidences of noisy jollification prevalent.

BEFORE THE RECORDER.

Sufficiently inspirating to the most patriotic must have been the scenes of general confusion always most prevalent for nearly three hours prior to the formation of the procession in Fourteenth-street. On every side resounded the firing of lesser and bigger guns, of nearly every grade, from the footpatent "cole" to the mammoth "Paixan." Simultaneous and making "confusion worse confounded" was the hissing, sizzuing rocket arising from the thousand and one inventions for display of juvenile patriotism. Add to this the din of unintuitive drums and shrill fifes marshalling their various bands to the one grand point of connection. And yonking there was a yonking forming in the line and out of the line—officers presenting—subordinate inspections; on the part of burrying outsiders, eager for all the sight, was clambering up shade and stoops and swearing at the trouble. Numbers were ambitious, sought "under difficulties," individual vantage places on iron railings and posts. Not only was nearly all New-York city, but present were an unusually large host of country cousins, who had come to witness "the sights" on this day. Also in attendance and eager strivers for best seeing positions, was a decided eleganic mixture of the foreign element.

The Parade of the Military.

We have seldom seen the military of our City appear to a better advantage. Notwithstanding the heat, they turned out in very large numbers. An additional feature of interest was the fact that the advertised programme was carried out to the very minute. The procession commenced to move and the escort reached the Park at the precise moment advertised. At 8 o'clock the division line formed on Broadway, with the right resting on Fourteenth-street. Soon after they marched around Union-square to Fourteenth-street, through Fourteenth-street to Third-avenue, down Third-avenue to Tenth-street, through Tenth-street to Broadway, down Broadway to Chambers-street, through Chambers-street to Centre-street and thence to the east gate of the Park.

THE REVIEW BEFORE THE MAYOR IN THE PARK.

A large number of tickets had been given out by the Committee of the Common Council to citizens and ladies, which admitted them to the Governor's Room. The room and balcony were well filled before the arrival of the procession. The police, under Chief MATSELL, kept a large space open in front of the City Hall to enable the military to pass through. Fully fifteen thousand persons were present to witness the parade. At 10 o'clock precisely, Major-General SANFORD, with his staff, passed through the east gate of the Park, followed by the Division escort. At the same moment the Committee of the Common Council waited on Mayor WOOD and the members of the two branches of the Council and conducted them to the floor of the City Hall. On a small platform a small flag belonging to the Mayor's office, and bearing the coat of arms of the City of New-York, was raised. The Mayor then took his position on the platform, the Common Council, and other officials holding their official staffs, ranging themselves on either side.

The veteran corps of 1812, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel RAYMOND, first passed in review, saluting the Mayor as they passed. They numbered about seventy-five.

The Military then passed in the following order:

The Engineer Corps of the Division, numbering about thirty men.

First Brigade, under the command of Brigadier-General SPICER:

First Regiment, Colonel RYER, composed of five companies and numbering about two hundred and twenty men—all Cavalry.

Third Regiment, also Cavalry, Colonel POWELL, composed of eight companies, and four hundred men.

Second Regiment, Infantry, Colonel BOBERT, preceded by ROBERTSON'S Band, composed of eight companies and about five hundred men. Captain EARLEY'S company, dressed in the Highland uniform, which forms a part of this regiment, and attracted much attention.

Seventy-first Regiment, Infantry, Colonel VOSBURGH, composed of eight companies and about two hundred and twenty-five men.

Second Brigade under the command of Brigadier-General YATES.

Fourth Regiment, Col. HIGGINS, composed of two hundred and eighty men. A part of this regiment is composed of cavalry. Besides this, it has two batteries of light artillery of eight pieces each. The artillery passed through the Park in sections.

Fifth Regiment Infantry, Col. SWARTZWELDER, composed of eight companies and five hundred men.

Sixth Regiment, Infantry, Col. PINCKNEY, composed of about 225 men.

Seventy-fifth Regiment, Infantry, Col. DOHENY, composed of about 180 men. This was the first occasion in which this new regiment has appeared in parade.

Third Brigade—On account of the accident which befell Brigadier General HALL, the command devolved upon Colonel DURYEA, of the Seventh Regiment.

The escort of the Brigade came first. Following was the Engineer corps of the Seventh Regiment. The Brigade then passed in the following order: Seventh Regiment (the National Guard) Lieutenant Colonel NEYERS, composed of eight companies and over 400 men. The marching of this regiment was the best and received the highest commendation of all.

Eighth Regiment, Col. LUCE, preceding Strauss's Band. This regiment has two troops of horse and about 250 infantry.

The Guards La Fayette, Capt. LE CLAIRE, composed entirely of French citizens, is a part of this regiment. It numbers one hundred men.

Ninth Regiment, Infantry, Lieut. Col. LEARNY. The regiment counted about one hundred and fifty men. The first company appeared in the new uniform of the regiment. It is composed of a blue frock coat and light skin cap.

Fourth Brigade, under the command of Brigadier Gen. EMMET.

Tenth Regiment, Col. HALPIN—this regiment turned out about two hundred and fifty men.

Eleventh Regiment, Infantry, Col. VAN BUREN, composed of about two hundred and fifty men.

Twelfth Regiment, Infantry, Lieut. Col. HARY, preceded by its Engineer Corps. The regiment turned out about three hundred and fifty men.

Sixty-Ninth Regiment, Infantry, Col. RYAN, composed of about two hundred and sixty men.

The Military after having passed through the Park, the different companies paraded to their respective armories and disbanded.

SEVERE ACCIDENT TO BRIGADIER GEN. HALL.

A severe accident occurred to Brigadier General HALL, commandant of the brigade, which not only prevented him from accompanying his command in the parade, but will also confine him to his bed for some time to come.

About 9 o'clock, as he was reviewing his brigade on Broadway, near Amity-street, on the left of the line, his horse made a spring and slipped on the wet mud of the Russ pavement, and fell. General HALL was thrown with great force to the ground, his right leg being caught under the horse. As soon as he was released, he was conveyed by Councilmen RIDER and several other gentlemen to a neighboring house, where his injuries were examined. It was found that both bones of the right leg were broken about four inches above the ankle joint. The bones were not splintered, the fracture being nearly straight across. The fractured limb was immediately set by Dr. GRAEFENBERG, of his staff, Drs. SAYRE and WEDPWARD, of Gen. HARFORD'S staff, and Dr. EAGER, of the Seventh Regiment. Gen. HALL was then conveyed to his residence in a carriage. He was visited after the parade by all general field, and staff officers of his brigade. He is at the present time in good health and spirits, though suffering much from pain in the fractured limb. He will probably be confined to his house for about two months.

The Day at Tammany.

Not a very large but a very respectable audience assembled at Tammany Hall shortly after 1 o'clock P. M., pursuant to call, and in accordance with annual custom. The Tammany Society, or Columbian Order, founded in 1789, was represented by some of its oldest spirits. They deemed it, in the terms of their circular, "peculiarly fitting at the present time, when civil liberty has been invaded by legislative influence, and religious liberty is threatened by the organization of intolerant and proscriptive men, that we should return to the great truths of the Declaration of Independence, and the early contests in which that Declaration was vindicated."

As soon as the Sachems began to assemble, Shelton's fine Band took its place on the balcony and played some magnificent airs. At 1½ o'clock the procession was formed, and, having paraded the room, W. D. KENNEDY, Esq., Father of the Council, and LORENZO B. SHEPARD, Esq., Grand Sachem, ex-officio, took their places at the desk, and the other Sachems seated themselves around. Among those present we noticed Sachems R. B. CONNOLY, ANDREW FROMENT, CASPER C. CHILDS, Col. ALEX. MING, Hon. J. KELLEY and DOUGLAS TAYLOR.

LORENZO B. SHEPARD, Esq., opened the proceedings with an address.

After concluding this address, Mr. SHEPARD called upon Hon. J. KELLEY to read the Declaration of Independence, which being done, Mr. SHEPARD proposed, in accordance with their custom, the memory of the author of the Declaration of Independence—THOMAS JEFFERSON.

The customary oration was then delivered by Col. ALEXANDER MING, the orator of the day, but we have not room for the oration until to-morrow.

Much applause followed the reading of the above. An ode, written for the occasion by F. B. HELBERT, Esq., was then sung by Messrs. CONNOLLY, TAYLOR, G. B. HALL, and ALBERT WALLACE, assisted by the audience.

A collation having been provided in another room, by Messrs. HOWARD & BROWN, the proprietors of Tammany, the greatest number of the audience repaired there, the price of admission being $1. The first regular toast was given by Mr. SHEPARD before the meal was commenced. It was—

The Day we Celebrate—May it be an important one.

After the viands had been amply discussed, the Second regular toast was produced.

The President of the United States—The first Commoner of the land—the instrument of freedom to put out public and private vigilance.

To this toast JOHN COCHRANE, Esq., responded. He said that the only organization that opposed FRANKLIN PIERCE, was that which opposed Tammany. Tammany, however, stood, and would continue to stand for PIERCE, under all circumstances.

The third regular toast was:

The Memory of Washington—immortal as his deeds.

Drank uncovered, the band playing a funeral dirge.

The fourth toast, proposed, like the others, by Mr. SHEPARD, was

The Tammany Society.

Responded to by Mr. O'KEEFE.

The fifth toast was,

The Signers of the Declaration of Independence—The Modern Runnymede—who demanded and obtained a better Magna Charta.

All by the band—We are all a Band Brothers.

AMBROSE L. PINNEY responded.

The sixth toast was,

The Constitution and the Union, the pillars of Liberty.

RICHARD B. CONNOLLY, County Clerk responded. The band played that stirring air, "Clear the Hurky Raccoon Down."

To the next toast,

The Governor of the State of New-York—

Governor MYRON HOLLEY responded, mentioning on the score that he might make himself heard above the enormous amount of sensibility which may happen to prevail.

The eighth regular toast was,

The Mayor and Common Council of the City of New-York—

Mayor HALL briefly responded.

The next toast was,

The Army and Navy—The wooden walls of the parentage of the Union.

Other toasts were drank and other speeches made, which we have not space to enumerate. The whole proceedings were characterized by the utmost harmony and good feeling.

"The Day on the Southern Shore."

CELEBRATION ON RANDALL'S ISLAND.

The celebration on Randall's Island commenced a most affecting and gratifying spectacle. The boys were marched down from their place in the grove about 11 o'clock, and were preceded by their juvenile band, playing "Hail Columbia," "Yankee Doodle," and other spirit-stirring airs. The order and discipline displayed would not have been excelled by some of our crack militia companies. A temporary platform was erected in the grove for the accommodation of the gentlemen and the visitors who were present, and seats were placed around for the children and the several officers of the institution. At 12 o'clock, Governor SMITH, DRAPER, DURE, TAYLOR, TOWNSEND and TIERNAN arrived, when the proceedings commenced by the delivery of an appropriate address to the one of the boys, Master H. MOORE, which elicited the praise and admiration of the entire assembly. The powers of elocution displayed were of a very high order, and reflect much credit on the training of the educational department of the House of Refuge. This was followed by a song, in which the girls, amounting to some hundreds, joined. Several of the boys captured the audience by getting through very humorous and interesting dialogues. One of them next delivered a stump speech in admirable keeping with the occasion. After the programme of speaking and singing and music had been gone through, Governor DRAPER proceeded to deliver the oration of the day, as follows:

GOVERNOR DRAPER'S ADDRESS.

Gentlemen: Six years ago this day, I had before me on this spot a thousand little ones. And every Fourth of July since that day I have met on this island an equal number of boys and girls, who like you, this morning have made glad my heart by your presence. Besides him, and son for one, stands a second member quadrille. Twenty-three years, with twenty-three families, equal to the one before you, have passed since the building was and mechanism in this institution. What glory rises within the citadel of her true heart when her reflections contemplate the careful guard she has kept over 20,000 helpless, dependant orphans, placed under fortuitous circumstances, by a wise Providence, in hands so ready, guided by a heart full of the melting tears of pure affection. To Col. STEARNS, the warden, and Mrs. LEY, the matron, you will surely give a heartfelt cheer. Thus have you spoken for your chiefs, and that deep not and the expression of your true gratitude for others that are equally in their efforts to make you cheerful, useful, and happy. Many of your numerous mentors, from the humblest and most modest come in with equal justice for their share of grateful remembrance. Year after year, they have ever been in service and fatigue at your bedside, and kindly guarded your bed of pain and sorrow; till the welcome return of health, took you from their watchful care. Mrs. STRONG, Mrs. RYAN and others, have a claim for your bright thoughts and acts that must not be forgotten. Mr. RIPLEY, too, your heavily watchman who guards you with a father's care, and whose daily pride in your faithful performance of duty emanates from your youthful thoughts and actions, a return of grateful and generous recollections,—who but those who make your acquaintance can fully appreciate the labor performed in your service! Who but those who strive to invest in words thought as to your future, may properly judge of the efforts here made to join you with the greater throng, and pass you onward to a prosperous life? Your scenes in future, instructive and dame, will ever be a source of pleasure to your minds. Let us, then, bid farewell to the children of the oldest in every sphere. The world has a place for you present, for or otherwise the parents strengthen and adorn the future. Bright examples are before you. The contemplation of this glorious Anniversary may form, within you, if properly nursed and duly cared, a turn of your youthful minds to brilliant and noble heroic deeds—such as the Fathers of the Republic whose ever-service and love of country of law, order, and liberty, has endeared them and will forever endear them to every child of America, whose lot has been cast by birth or choice within the bounds of our country under a long written declaration, and a Constitution always to be observed.

Think, children, I conjure you, of the blessings you have enjoyed during the past year, and be thankful. Your vision may be for you amid the anxious hours of sickness which at times come unwelcomely among you while children need means to invite disease. See your faithful physician making his rounds to stay the first symptom which appears among you in the Hospital, and while your thoughts are freshened with a recollection of its dread fell hands, turn to your Father in Heaven, with honest and fervent thankfulness, that he has provided you with an earthly friend in your faithful physicians. Your chosen has well as your nurses, the your reliable friends, their hopes and happiness are kindly interwoven with your health, your strength, and your happiness, and reward them by a most worthy that your noble service. Remember, I beg of you, the surplus of all who daily serve you in the great lessons of future hope—your EDUCATION. What could you do without their patient attention, their enduring efforts? Day by day they open new and useful paths of knowledge; they place your childish thoughts upon the bright path of information, in the use of common sense; they teach you to be good citizens of human society; they teach you to be good citizens of human society; they teach the lessons of your duties to your Maker, and bring the lessons home in with your God and Father. Regard it sacredness, all who lend a helping hand for your present comfort and your future welfare. Those who daily and in your infant, and in friendly kindness add your labors, cannot be not to be passed over in this day's identification. Remember the attentions, and return to them, when you have opportunity, your best solicitous gratitude.

All in all, the best you, as good and generous minded and when you, passed your hour from, and are now with to take the further step of your maturity, may one be the day it will be to meet you forward, with every thought, and to place you onward in the path for future days, beyond an honorable departure from the child. I would not intend my words in pleasing the world, but would be a source of pleasure to your minds. Let upon you to make every and time a place among your friends and relations, your minds, the minutes, the hours, and the years, and the years, and the years, the years, the years,

A Word in Reply to the Richmond Enquirer.

The history of the world, where it is not made up of the sad records of international and civil wars, finds its chief material in the contests of opinion and passion. Now it is a question of finance, then of religious liberty, again one of trade or politics, or social reformation. There is a great circle permanently marked out, in which the interest of the race may be seen perpetually revolving and agitated, sometimes on a higher and again on a lower elevation, as the age is rude or polished.

It is our good fortune to be engaged for the most part with the problems of peace, and little with the destructive exigencies of war. Many of the problems which baffled the wit of other ages we have successfully solved. The practicability of free institutions, for a time, at least, has been demonstrated. Religious toleration has been amply vindicated. The political equality of men practically acted upon. And yet, after all—strange phenomenon of free society—the great and only truly difficult problem which can now engage the minds of the people of the United States is that of domestic slavery.

The foremost sons of the Old Dominion, those who have succeeded to WASHINGTON the author, and to JEFFERSON the defender of political equality and of freedom on this side the water, recreant to ancient principles, now declare what their fathers deemed a necessary and sad necessity of the times, to be a natural, necessary, and universal element of society.

Such is the retrograde position assumed by the Richmond Enquirer on the subject of Slavery, in responding to some remarks which had been made by us vindicatory of the South, its prosperity and morality.

We do not intend to enter into an elaborate defence of free society against the expressions of our able cotemporary, nor yet to attempt an answer to all the ingenious and specious suggestions which are hazarded in defence of an institution which its own heavy weight urges on to its ruin, but the occasion is a suitable one for fresh remembrance of the benignant influences of freedom as contrasted with the withering ones of servitude.

Where the national mind is awake and energetic with the life of intelligence and education, all history shows that there will flourish to a greater or less extent radical and novel ideas and theories, and mental aberrations and extravagances. It is an inevitable condition of the free light of day that some weak eyes should be blinded, or at least dazzled. But these circumstances have no more influence on the general intelligence and virtue of society than the obscurations upon the face of the sun have upon the power of its light and heat to bless and vivify our world.

The sentiment of religious liberty was evolved amid many absurd and fanatical systems. In the Sixteenth Century the sentiment of political equality was surrounded in its origin in England by wild fanaticism, and in France by revolutionary violence; and yet those periods form epochs in the progress of the human mind. Thus much for the rather inconsistent charges of Northern superstition and skepticism of the Enquirer. If there be anything of the kind, it is only an evidence of the extraordinary activity of the human mind with us, and sure if in the end to be tempered and corrected by that sober, sound and intelligent morality which is interwoven with every fibre of the great body of Northern society, and which enables it with impunity to tolerate in its midst the enunciation of the wildest and most extravagant political and religious theories. The citation of the philosophy of Hobbes, by our cotemporary, "that man is in a state of continual war with his fellows," as capable of conception only in a free society, is unfortunate, seeing that it is only among the savage tribes of Africa that that philosophy is practically exhibited, and that its results are the captives who go to sustain the Slave-trade and build up the institution of Slavery. In regard to the carrying of deadly weapons at the South, although it may not prevail in Virginia and in the more northerly of the Southern States, yet the fact that laws have been enacted in a number of those States to prevent it, and quite recently one in Louisiana, would seem to indicate that such a practice does prevail in certain sections of the South. Be this as it may, to us, at least, the evils of servitude will ever present themselves as palpable and profound. We can see abundant reasons for the necessity of its continuance in the South under existing circumstances. We can sympathize with Southern freemen when all measures for such action as may be necessary for their own preservation, and for the preservation of their slaves and of the prosperity of their adjoining states, the possibility of whose contamination in whose hands they have been placed by the policy and avarice of another age and nation. But we cannot sympathize with any political system which reckons Slavery as one of its proper and permanent institutions.

That institution has never been consistent with highly civilized life, at least, in modern times, and in that singular compound of barbarism and refinement which made up the civilization of the ancients, the element of slavery proved one of the chief agents of its dissolution. In modern society, which has been moulded chiefly by the Christian religion, absolute servitude gradually changed into predial, and ultimately wore out imperceptibly. It is quite surprising that its sole Christianity, which has been most effective in the extinpation of Slavery in the Old World, claimed as its ally and defender in the new. On the contrary, we trust under its influence to see Slavery gradually and silently wear out on this continent. Our anticipations for the South, but for this expectation, would be of the gloomiest character.

An intellectual, young and vigorous oligarchy, reigning over degraded and ignorant multitudes, may stand and answer moderately well in the present condition of the South. There is still an abundance of food and room for the masses. The reigning classes are as yet unpalsied by luxury and ease, and they exercise leniently and kindly the irresponsible and unmeasured power which they possess.

But will this always be the case? We have no reason to believe it. The South is not exempt from those natural laws which have alternately elevated and ruined other societies. The people there—for so the Slaves, considering their number, may properly be styled—will increase steadily and in a much greater ratio than the oligarchical body which governs them. This our statistics manifest. This latter class will not always retain its youthful vigor and strength. A half century may exhibit the startling spectacle of an ignorant people, penetrated with a sense of wrong, waxing stronger and stronger in physical power, while the intellect and vigor of those who have kept them in industrious subjection are constantly diminishing.

What would be the issue of such a state of things, we cannot say. We know what has occurred in St. Domingo and in other of the West India Islands. We know, too, that there cannot be perpetual peace where one great class of the people feel the smart of heavy burdens imposed by another.

The whole subject is surrounded with difficulties. Northern men can see with those of the South the impolicy as well as the impossibility of sudden emancipation. Animated by an ardent aspiration for the preservation of the noble fabric of freedom which has been erected on this continent, we regret to see the Richmond Enquirer and many of its compeers at the South determinedly maintaining, not that Slavery is an inevitable and painful necessity of the present, but "a natural, necessary and universal limb or element of society."

A Popular Cry.

Down with the Ailanthus trees! New-York is sick at the stomach,—the whole population is poisoned by the nauseating effluvium emitted by the filthy Ailanthus trees which have been planted in all our streets. Where is Mayor Wood, that he does not issue a proclamation against the Ailanthus? What is the use of arresting all the innocent little poodle dogs and long-eared spaniels, for fear they should bite somebody in the heel, and permitting a forest of nauseating and disease-breeding trees to remain in our streets and public parks? We know a gentleman who recently purchased a house which was surrounded by Ailanthus trees, and the first thing he did after coming into possession of the property, was to cut down every one of the rascally trees and to set out in their places some of the beautiful natives of our own forests, and a similar course should be pursued by our City authorities. We heard a resident of Brooklyn Heights complaining yesterday that he had often been annoyed by the cargoes of Peruvian guano, and Buenos Ayrean hides, stored in the warehouses under the Heights, but the two annoyances combined did not begin to be half so nauseating as the odor emitted by the Ailanthus trees under his windows.

Shipping a Crew.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

You will oblige many seamen by inserting the following. Seamen are now charged by those who ship them, cartmen connected with the office, from one to three dollars for a chance to go to sea, and at the same time the owners of the ship are paying the same parties two dollars per man, just double what it was a few years since. Now, Sir, I wish the merchants of this City to see this in its proper light; to look into it, and take measures to effect a radical reform. No reasonable man can deny but it is high time that the present system was done away with. When seamen are scarce, and it is a difficult matter to procure crews for the larger class of vessels, it is a common thing for shipping Notaries to pay from one to ten dollars over and above the advance to get men. This premium does the owner does not get, but it goes into his Agent's pocket, which the owners pay, it being charged into the ship's bill by the Notary. But how does this work when seamen are plenty and ships scarce? Why, simply the man has to buy his chance or the landlord does for him, but it will be sure to be found in his account—Debtor to shipping, so much. But do the owners find credit on their bills for men shipped in this way? No, never. Such a bill cannot be found in this City. Well, you say, if this is all true, what remedy is to be applied? It may be remedied in the following manner. Let the master of a ship, a day or two before he sails, hoist his "sash" as in times gone past; let the seamen come on board, be selected by the master or mate, and examined sufficiently to know whether they are seamen or not, and let those who practice asking go to the notary's savings the trouble, and if the practice of selling or giving away the chance to transient men, people who go aboard and leave the vessel and go where they please, be done away with, and they are sent ashore, turn them adrift and procure others in their stead. The only trouble the master has in, if he does make another selection to go in the same ship, can be avoided by a thorough going seaman, who will shipped the first morning tonight and sold off like a bale of goods, or, in other words, refuse to pay the advance or give anyone the chance, and for a reason to the effect that he has shipped and sold his chance away to a responsible kind on the very mark of sailor, but is willing his landlord should pay for his chance, he will be shipped and the good man refused, simply because he will not put an extra $2 or $3 in the notary's pocket. Merchants and Captains, aye, and those who never saw salt water, talk about sailors being such a low, despicable set of men. It is a great wonder they are not ten times worse under the present system. They are, generally speaking, slaves, bondsmen, of the worst kind, from the moment their feet touched the land until they sail back. If he has not the family of figuring correctly, or hook the worm, and even if he has, a glass of "chain lightning," administered by way of a quietus, sentence his arithmetic to the winds, and the first gleam of consciousness finds him some hundreds of miles from the scene in which he remembers to have last figured, bound, he knows not where, neither the name of the ship. An instance occurs to my mind which illustrates this: The ship ———, bound from New-York to Europe, was mooring the Banks of Newfoundland, when one evening just at dusk the mate was accosted by a man whom he had never seen, with the question, "Will you tell me what ship this is, Sir?" "The ship ———," replied the mate. "Where is she bound?" "To ———." "Oh, my head," groaned the poor fellow; he stood stunned him for a moment, gave one spring, cleared the rail, and was seen no more. It was the first time the man had been on deck, having been confined to his berth on account of sickness, brought on by the over-dosing of his liberal landlord. There is one thing which will prevent all this, which will raise the now down-trodden sailor to a standard which, of all other men, he most deserves. No other class of men suffer so much, or are so ill used, or poorly fed and paid. I am willing to admit that there are exceptions, but they are few and far between. Some of them, no doubt, have to be hard used to get along with. But who are they, and where did they come from? It is not for the wages that they go to sea, but for the plunder they obtain by robbing their more trusting mates, and oftentimes expending their excursions into the "between decks," and even the cabin. The remedy for all this is to abolish the system of advancing money before it becomes due. Pay them when it is earned, and make it an offence punishable by a fine or imprisonment to sign a ship's articles to proceed on a voyage, which they have not to adhere to, unless by mutual consent, for good and valid reasons.

In conclusion, I would commend this subject to the consideration of the "Board of Commerce," as a matter which may be profitably discussed, as well as many others, in relation to our commerce; for what is the use of ships, without men to sail them, and it is reasonable to suppose they would rather have good thorough going seamen to guard their treasures, and maybap their lives, than poor, inefficient men, who have been literally sold, composed for the most part of bad-natured, sullen, shoemakers, and runaway apprentices, and dissolute boys. And I venture to say, that it is in the power of the ship owning merchants of this country, and without any additional expense to themselves, to establish and keep up as healthy and efficient merchant marine sailors as the world can boast of. Nearly all the boys belonging to our merchant marine are over half a century old, and are fast behind the age, however adaptable they might have been when eight months was considered a fair passage from Calcutta, and out to the West Indies and back in four months was considered smart work. I say in those days these laws might have answered every purpose, but now necessity demands a thorough overhaul and reorganization of the radically rotten state of things. SALT WATER.

Julia Fiendis the Ailanthus.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

A writer in the TIMES yesterday, under the head of "Our Upas Tree," calls upon every man who has an Ailanthus tree on his premises to destroy it, and thinks they should be removed by a corporation ordinance. Permit me, through your columns, to say a word pro contra. It is true that there is, for about nine days, when they commence blowing, a disagreeable odor, which, at the same time, is pronounced a very healthful one by beauties and physicians. But this, for so short a time, is surely a small evil in comparison with the advantages it affords. It is beautiful to the eye, refreshing as a shade, of quick growth—but above all, it is always free from those jumping or measuring worms which destroy so many of our finest trees, and of which, as observed in our City will notice, hardly one escapes their ravages.

I beg leave to "call upon every man who has an Ailanthus tree" on his premises, to nurture it with care, and that it may be an ordinance of the Corporation that every street be planted with them. And this is no spirit of contrariety, but because it would afford an agreeable shade to every pedestrian in the Summer heats, and enable us to walk our streets without fear of those horrid worms falling upon our necks, and crawling into our hair and ears. THE SIZE OF CATTLE NOW AND THEN.

The usual weekly meeting of this Association took place on Tuesday at noon.

On the screen was an elaborate chalk sketch of the inner face of the left jawbone of the Egyptian sacred Bull. Its identification, as to authenticity is founded upon the fact of it being accurately copied from the jaw-bone of a "mummied" bull in Doctor ABBOTT's collection, guaranteed by some of the highest European authorities. The object of the diagram was to show by comparison with the average of the American ox, that there is an appreciable discrepancy between the ancient and modern (not species but) variation. The measurements of each were given in detail.

The practical inferences sought to be established are, that the limit beyond which certain modes of feeding can go in modifying the osteological development of animals is more confined in its range than has been commonly imagined. No doubt the Egyptian god Apis was well fed.

SELF-CLOSING FAUCETS.

Dr. FIELD, of Brooklyn, being called to the Chair,

Mr. TUTHILL, of Boston, was introduced to the meeting, and proceeded to illustrate and describe certain self-closing "faucets" for the supply of water or other fluids, the peculiarity being that there is no drop nor waste, and also an instantaneous full stream. The contrivance is of very general applicability. Pulsations of water, from the internal spring and pushing to draw a valve acted upon by pressure with the finger. The simplicity and ingenuity of the contrivance elicited much appreciation. It is not liable to get out of order, owing to the elasticity and durability of the rubber. It is patented, and named "Cobb's Patent."

Mr. MEADE observed that the Government once would have occasion to test these faucets and compounds.

A number of India-rubber bags were dropped along the road hence to Washington. The metallic fastenings became displaced but the bags were uninjured. The inventor demonstrated its application as a steam valve, in which case the rubber does not come in contact with the steam. Oil decomposes rubber; in this case, also, the same modification of parts is applicable.

Letters were read from the "Croton Aqueduct Department," and from other persons, highly eulogizing this self-closing contrivance, and explaining that the fluid cut only run so long as the pressure of the hand is upon the valve. A specimen was presented for the Museum.

THE PEST OF CATTLE.

Dr. WATERBURY then proceeded to lay down on the table a well fed bullock in the form of the Pleurodon was as bigger than an equally well fed American bullock.

Professor MAPES then proceeded to show from his specimens of the Saurian of the Mississippi, that the ancient animals were not so much larger than the present specimens. The weight of an ordinary ox in the present time was about from 800 pounds; and the average was 1,000 pounds. He then proceeded to show that the ancient animals were not so much larger than the present specimens. He then proceeded to show that the Saurian was not the ancestor of the present race of oxen

HALIFAX, Thursday, July 5.

The Royal Mail Steamship America, Capt. LANG, arrived at this port yesterday (Wednesday) afternoon, and will be due at Boston at an early hour on Friday morning.

Her mails will doubtless reach New-York on Friday afternoon.

The America brings dates from Liverpool to the 23d June, three days later than received by the Hermann.

The news is scanty, but in the highest degree important.

The Allies had met with a serious check before Sebastopol.

On the 18th of June the French and English respectively attacked the Malakoff and Redan towers, but were both repulsed with great slaughter.

The details could not be looked for before the end of June, and in the meantime private advices of the most serious description were agitating the public mind.

According to one account, the British loss alone was not short of four thousand, including among the killed General CAMPBELL, and upwards of seventy other officers.

Contradictory rumors prevailed, and it was thought that the above was somewhat exaggerated.

In the British Parliament, Mr. ROEBUCK had moved a vote of censure against the Ministry.

A large new French Loan was to be immediately negotiated.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

In the Liverpool Cotton Market, depression had succeeded the buoyancy lately exhibited—and, with a very limited demand, prices had considerably declined—in some cases to the extent of one farthing ℔ lb. The week's business was estimated to amount 24,000 bales, mainly for the trade.

BREADSTUFFS, with the exception of INDIAN CORN, which had slightly advanced, ringed at about the rates current on the departure of the Baltic.

PROVISIONS generally were steady at former quotations.

The London Money Market was still easier, and Consols had declined to 86¾.

(The details of the news will be published on Friday morning.)

Sudden and Fatal Riot in Columbus, Ohio.

COLUMBUS, Thursday, July 5.

Yesterday evening as a procession of firemen, Turners and others was parading the streets, a difficulty took place between one of the Turners and a boy, when as there was attended by the Turners, and they all marched back threatening and throwing stones at the people in the streets. The riot then became general, and the Turners being armed with revolvers, commenced firing upon the crowd. Over a dozen shots were discharged, and one young man was so severely wounded that he died within half an hour. Many others were badly injured by stones and canes, but none, it is believed, fatally. The police have arrested 24 Turners, against whom public opinion is very decided, as there appears to have been no excuse whatever for their conduct.

The Committee on Resolutions made two reports—that of the majority avoids the Liquor Law and the Nebraska question, but the minority report takes strong ground on both subjects. The majority report was adopted by a vote of 80 to 18, after being amended by the insertion of a resolution against negroes voting.

THE FOURTH OF JULY.

ADDITIONAL ITEMS.

The Fourth at West Point.

Dr. SAMUEL JOHNSON related that a certain individual, writing a "Natural History of Iceland," had one book specially devoted to the subject "Of Owls in Iceland," the first and only chapter of which consisted of the sentence, "There are no owls in Iceland." In like manner, the historian of the glorious Fourth, writing on the celebration at West Point, might briefly record, "There was no celebration at West Point." In truth, the demonstrations here have been very few and far between of late years. Precisely at noon there was a salute of thirteen guns in honor of the original number of the States when Independence was declared.

But there were "lots of fun" outside. Our [illegible] to all except the unfortunate. New-York sent a steamboat full of persons, bound on an excursion to West Point, where (they had been told) the day was to be honored with remarkable éclat. They had a glorious voyage up the river—a beauty worth a dozen Rhines, in commercial position and utility worth a score of Tennessees. They arrived at West Point landing-place, a tight sunny company. But there they were met with a ruthless standing-order which prohibits the landing of excursionists—ex sich! So they had to cross the river to GARRISON'S Ferry, where they were transferred to the compost ferry steamer, the Putnam, (so called, we presume, in honor of the county in which Judge GARRISON's homestead and landed estate are situated,) and were then taken across the river again, and landed without opposition—as ferry passengers! They rushed en masse up to the Military Academy; they saw the white tents of the cadets picturesquely parcelled on the fine plateau; they discovered that there were no particular manifestations in honor of the day, they surrendered themselves to ROE's Hotel, which had been provisioned as if it were a besieged fortress. They obtained refreshment, ad libitum, but when they called for "strong waters" (as is the custom of excursionists on an afternoon,) were informed that Captain ROE kept a Temperance house, and, besides, would never violate the anti-drink law, which make champagne drinking next door to a capital felony, and places brandy and water imbibation only a degree or two below larceny.

Our reporter wisely kept on the east side of the river. He went by the Hudson River Road, and though heaps of passengers had been disgorged at various stopping places along the line, reached GARRISON'S Ferry at the exact minute promised on the yellow time bill. (President SLOAN and Superintendent SYKES have made the arrivals so regular that people set their watches by them, in preference of the sun, which sometimes does not stay, whereas, they always do.) After a satisfactory dinner, he was taken a series of drives, behind a pair of two-fifties, to see the beautiful High lands and river views which abound in Putnam County. He saw the Indian Falls, and beautiful they are. He saw all sorts of landscapes and water-scapes. He looked from the top of the Iron Rock. He noticed that cherries appear to be the staple (roadside) produce of Putnam County. He took tea from the identical table, and beneath the shadow of the ample mulberry to which WASHINGTON himself sat, in the war of Independence, hearts seventy years ago, and what further happened to him remains to be related in his Autobiography—in nine folio volumes. Only, as a memorable matter, he may say, that, with the exception of a very small fire-up, consisting of a five cent packet of Chinese squibs, he happily did not smell powder during the whole day.

TO NEWBURG.

A considerable number of citizens went up by two excursion-boats to Newburg, and the cars were loaded continuously. The Maine Liquor Law was rigidly observed—no person drinking anything strong whatever, except on the sly. The general practice of the day, however, seemed to be considerably "on the sly."

UP TOWERS.

Not a drop of liquor to be had—quiet, pleasant times—fireworks before GRETT's in the evening. The cars ran off the track below Yonkers, and the passengers enjoyed the rain.

THE RIVER.

The squall in the afternoon stripped several sloops of their sails and laid one flat on her side. No serious losses to anybody, however. When the rain came down at the heaviest the boat laid to—and took it.

Three boys, on the corner of Tenth-avenue and Eighteenth-street, named COLWELL, IRVIN and MCCOY, were firing off pistols, when one of their powder flasks caught fire by some accident or another and exploded, severely injuring the boys in the hands and face. They were immediately taken home and attended to.

A woman, named MARY O'CONNOR, was run struck yesterday and taken to the City Hospital.

A man, named WM. O'CONNOR, in the Fifth Ward, had his face badly burned by the bursting of a powder-flask. He was conveyed to the Hospital.

A child, seven years of age, named ELLEN LILLY, whose parents reside at No. 108 Avenue D, was run over by one of the Avenue C and Houston-street Line of Stages, yesterday, and killed almost instantly. Those who observed the occurrence say it was purely accidental.

A party of gentlemen at Mount Vernon, while engaged in firing a salute in honor of the Fourth, had one of their number named RAYNOR severely injured, by the premature discharge of a cannon. RAYNOR was ramming home the cartridge when the explosion took place, and his hands were severely injured, possibly crippled for life.

MOUNT VERNON.

The citizens of the adjoining town of Mount Vernon celebrated our national anniversary with unusual spirit. The ladies of the Dutch Reformed Church of that place gave an entertainment, the Declaration of Independence was read and patriotic addresses delivered. The proceeds of the dinner and other luxuries are to be appropriated to the liquidation of the debt of the church. At night there was a splendid display of fireworks, under the immediate direction of WM. H. OAKLEY, Esq.

Fire in Prince-street—Narrow Escape from Suffocation.

Shortly after 12 o'clock last night, a fire broke out on the first floor of building No. 138 Prince-street, occupied by Mr. J. C. STORE, as a fancy store, in which was stored a quantity of monster fireworks. The alarm was soon given, and the police of the Eight Ward and firemen were quickly on the ground. Owing to the material within the store, the flames made rapid headway, and an immense quantity of suffocating smoke soon filled the building, and spread about so much as to retard the labors of the firemen and police. Two families occupied the upper part of the building—that of Mr. JAMES NAGLE and Mr. BEERS were in bed and asleep at the breaking out of the fire. Their danger was, of course, most imminent, as all hopes of escape by the stairs were cut off by the flames and smoke. This fact created terrible excitement among those collected on the outside, who took speedy means for rescuing, if possible, those in peril. Finally, with much difficulty, the firemen succeeded by means of their ladders in reaching the second story, into which they went, and by groping on their hands and knees reached the beds of the sleepers, carried them to the window, aroused them, and with the assistance of the policemen and firemen on the outside, lowered them to the sidewalk. The persons thus saved were Mr. and Mrs. BEERS, and Mr. and Mrs. NAGLE and their two daughters, two sons, and their niece. Some of the occupants of the building thus aroused, in their excitement and haste to escape, were somewhat injured. Miss MARGARET NAGLE leaped from the second story to the ground, injuring her back and hips, and sprained both her ankles. Miss ELLEN NAGLE, while descending from the second story, got her feet entangled in the rungs of the ladder and fell to the ground, spraining both her ankles. She was also otherwise injured, though not seriously. Their cousin, Miss MARY ANN ——, was badly bruised about the shoulders and head, while effecting her escape.

After the above named person had been rescued, it was ascertained that another person—a son of Mr. VOYLES—was yet within the building in his bed-room, on the attic. A few daring firemen again darted into the building, and reached the attic where they found the young man soundly asleep, unconscious of his danger, and the room filled with dense and suffocating smoke. He objected decidedly to being removed from his slumbers, and resisted strongly his rescuers, who were conveying him in their arms down to the second floor, and asked them "what they meant—what they were going to do then?" He was soon made conscious of the state of affairs, however, and speedily reached the street, greatly exhausted as were also the gallant fellows who had saved him.

So overpowering was the smoke that the rescuers were compelled to drop three times one of the females whom they were conveying, and rush to the window to catch a breath of the fresh air.

The gallant firemen who more particularly distinguished themselves on this occasion, by thus saving so many lives, are THOMAS O'BRIEN, CHARLES WILSON and LEVI D. WHITE, of Hose Company No. 56; GARDENER VAN BRENT, of Engine No. 11; and a member of Hook and Ladder Company No. 6, whose name our Reporter was unable to ascertain.

The damage to the building was not very extensive. The whole of the store premises and first story were "gutted," and the basement part was more or less damaged by water.

Mr. STORE's loss amounts to $1,000,—$900 on stock and $100 on furniture. He is insured for $1,000 in the Lorillard Insurance Company. Mr. NAGLE's loss amounted to $500. Mr. BEERS's loss is small.

Additional Fires.

About 9¾ o'clock, P. M., a fire was discovered issuing from the fourth story of No. 250 Washington-street, occupied by WAINRIGHT & SAYRES, as a wool and willow-ware store. The fourth story and roof were entirely destroyed.

At 10:40 o'clock, P. M., a fire broke out on the roof of tenement house No. 9 Essex-street, but it was soon extinguished and with trifling damage.

The building on the corner of Vesey and Greenwich streets, occupied as a store and dwelling, was discovered on fire at 10½ o'clock, P. M. It was put out without much damage.

At 11½ o'clock a fire broke out in the fourth story of a building in the rear of No. 72 Fourth-street, occupied by SULLIVAN D. HENNELLY as a lock factory. It proceeded from the furnace. Damage trifling.

At one o'clock this morning a fire occurred in the basement of No. 92 Warren-street, occupied as a patent medicine manufactory. The upper portions of the building were occupied as a dining saloon and for offices. The firemen were on the ground immediately and confined the flames to the basement, which was not much damaged.

First Arrest under the Prohibitory Law.

CHARLES H. SMITH, proprietor of the Globe Hotel, in Howard-street, was yesterday arrested, and brought before Judge BIRDSALL, of the Marine Court, on a charge of violating the new Prohibitory law. He gave bonds for his appearance, to answer the charge when called upon.

Cricket on the Fourth.

A match was played at Hoboken between twenty-two members of the New-York and St. George's Club. There was a good may friends of Cricket on the ground, and if the weather had not proved treacherous they would have had a good day's sport. A very heavy thunder storm between 2 and 4, which nearly blew the tent down and wetted all who took shelter under its roof, put a stop to the day's play in the middle of the second innings. Score:

Dr. Blain on the Eye—Letter No. 2.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

SIR—In accordance with my promise of Saturday, I will to-day speak of Conjunctivitis, or more commonly known as Acute Ophthalmia; and first of the causes of this disease so prevalent among all classes, especially the poor.

The immediate or exciting causes are direct injury, such as wounds or violences inflicted on vegetal specimens. Also, by substances coming in contact or getting into the eye, such as dust, sand, steel, &c. These may injure mechanically, others chemically. Among the latter class, it may be well to enumerate a few of the many applications made to the eye in the form of remedies. Such for instance as acetate of lead, white and red precipitate, nitrate of mercury, sugar of zinc, nitrate of zinc and copper, nitrate of silver, and not unfrequently do we find even the nitric and muriatic acids and muriate of antimony used. And it would seem as if the most delicate and sensitive organ of the body had been selected for trying the most violent applications.

The simple fact of their being called remedies makes them none the less harmless, for a small portion of any of them being applied to the sound eye of a healthy person would produce a greater or less degree of inflammation. Again, exposure to cold and damp atmosphere, living in damp basements, or sudden change of temperature, disorder of the digestive organs, too long continued exercise by gas light or upon minute or bright objects, and many other causes might be mentioned, but this must suffice. The symptoms are redness, which is superficial, smarting pain, heat, dryness, accompanied with slight headache and fever, and but little intolerance of light, together with a feeling as if there was sand or gravel in the eye. These symptoms, though slight at first, may increase in severity, and cause granulation of the lids, or purulent ophthalmia, the former causing a feeling as if pins were pricking the ball of the eye. The treatment of this disease, according to the usual mode, is bleeding, leeching, poultices, scarification of the conjunctiva, mercury, blistering, &c. Whereas, if mild, constitutional treatment, together with soothing applications are made use of, very many of the hopeless cases which we now meet might have been relieved and saved from hopeless blindness. But, says one, you do not follow the prescribed rules as laid down in medical works in your treatment. No, for six years' experience has taught me that to heal, I must not risk to destroy, nor pull down to build up; but rather strengthen and soothe the inflamed organ that is weak, and thereby restore it to its natural vigor and activity. In my next letter I will speak of purulent ophthalmia of infants.

LONG ISLAND.

Accident.

On Monday afternoon, the driver of a hearse, returning from Greenwood Cemetery, was thrown violently from his seat in consequence of the breaking of the fore axle of the carriage. The horses immediately started off at full speed with the hearse, and before the driver could recover himself, the horse and carriage passed over him, injuring him severely. He was picked up and carried into an adjacent store and thence to the hospital. The horse and carriage went down the crowded street towards the Ferry and upset a private carriage in its progress, but was finally stopped. The hearse was broken to pieces.

Names of Streets.

The following names of streets in Brooklyn have been recently changed. Oxford and Hampden streets, and Portland-avenue, south side of De Kalb-avenue, to South Hampden; South Oxford and South Portland, and north of De Kalb-avenue, to North Hampden; &c.

☞ The Brooklyn Common Council have at last agreed upon purchasing a site for a Station House for the First District Police, on Montague-street, near Clinton.

☞ "GOING TO ROME ON NOT?"—Mr. BANCROFT, the Historian, we learn, instead of having gone to Rome, as the papers announced a few weeks since, is actually dwelling at his residence in Newport, engaged in the consummation of his History of the American Revolution—with no thought whatever of professing an allegiance of any kind, whether spiritual or temporal, to the Holiness the Pope.—Providence Journal.
